people is not one for Prince Rupert alone. It is the problem of all men. We must take part in the international struggle and translate it into local terms."

Prince Rupert has received only 1.46 per cent of the ship contracts let on the Pacific coast. The closing of the shipyards here would be a major blow to the city, Mr. Mickleburgh said. The government was not aware of the prospects of the territory.

"The future of northwestern B.C. lies in planned regional development and international trade across the North Pacific must play an important part in (The Pattetique). Eugene Ar-

ment. Strong Appeal

For Unity

Tom McEwen launched a strong appeal for unity in Canada based on the philosophy of world progress developed by Churchill, Stalin and Roosevelt at Teheran and Yalta.

"The political picture of Canada is like a crazy quilt—all patchwork. The country cries for unity. Countries which have been overrun by the Nazis and later liberated find little difficulty in achieving unity to create new democratic forms of government," he declared.

"Canada's future," he said, "no longer hinges on political parties. It is a question of policies and men."

The Progressive - Conservative party he disposed of with the statement that any candidate who had taken it on himself to carry the standard of Toryism had done himself badly.

"No enlightened man would carry it in the face of the record of international Toryism," he de-The C.C.F. came under criticism as having tried to "split Labor down the middle" by attempting to "hitch the labor unions to their party." "The strike is no longer a necessary weapon of labor, but has been replaced by collective bargaining," he said.

He suggested that the unions of Prince Rupert hold collective discussions on methods necessary to keep the dry dock in full operation, and submit their ideas to the Chamber of Commerce and other orgnizations for support.

A collection during the evening yielded $51.

The new year, 1917, brought bitter disappointments to the new premier and the British people. Russia collapsed and the Red revolution followed. Argument was still poignant over Jutland. Haig's thrust at the Hindenburg Line in front of Cambrai, entrustea to Sir Julian Byng, later governor-general of Canada, was another disappointment, and the Italian disaster at Caporetto crowded on its heels.
