After The Pact

THE NORTH ATLANTIC PACT has at last become a reality and with it new hope springs in the hearts of free men everywhere. However, let us not suffer from illusion that the signing of this epochal document will ensure for us a period of everlasting peace. The signing of the pact can be considered as a clear indication that we are saying to the Russians: "You have gone so far, you shall go no further."

It takes no great imagination to perceive what the reaction of Russia will be to this. We can prepare ourselves for a storm of abuse and threats such as we have not experienced since 1939. The Russians will do everything in their power to undermine the good intent underlying this show of strength and will attempt to portray it as an instrument for evil.

Already the members of the L.P.P. are screaming invectives in posters and paid newspaper advertisements. Whether they are fools to do so or whether we are fools to let them is a debatable point. The fact remains that should they even breathe such thoughts against government policy in a Communist-dominated country they would be 11:45-Famous Voices liquidated quickly. Freedom of speech is a priviilege we appreciate but one wonders to what extent it should be permitted when its abuse attempts to tear down and destroy the very structures of our way of life.

The Communist roar that the signing of the pact is a military alliance intended to destroy peace and create war. We, in our peaceful non-police state, know how untrue this is. It seems to us that the Communist ranting presupposes that we are as insincere in our declarations as they have proven to be in so many of their agreements and statements. So we have supported our leaders in their efforts to make certain peace is preserved. History has shown us that this can only be achieved by

Now that our government has committed us to this line of action, success will depend entirely upon the deeds of management, labor and of every citizen. If management becomes apathetic and fails to prepare itself for the possible emergency, and if labor fails in production, then we will be ill equipped to back up the bold efforts of the pact. This is something that Russia will be watching keenly. The minute she has reason to believe that the pact is but a scrap of paper with nothing to back it up, all the good work will have availed us nothing and we will then have but ourselves to blame for the inevitable consequences.

THE BRITISH BUDGET

CIR STAFFORD CRIPPS' second budget will be O opened on Wednesday in the British House of Commons. The debate will go on for four days. It will range not only over the financial situation of the United Kingdom but also over the economic outlook. The Chancellor of the Exchequer may well feel encouraged by the accuracy of his estimating for the past year. Last April he estimated for a budget surplus of £330 million ($1,320 million). The outturn he disclosed last week showed a surplus of £350 million. While expenditure was £200 million more than was estimated, revenue was £240 12 C million more.

The Chancellor must again budget for a surplus and, although there may be some adjustments in taxation, there can scarcely be any reduction in the total burden of taxation put upon the people of Britain.

In 1949 the nation will face a further stage in the fight against inflation. It is still necessary to restrain home demand in order to maintain the export drive and further reduce the United Kingdom's dependence on foreign aid. Inflation must still be offset.

For the Chancellor merely to announce that the somewhat stringent measures are to be continued for another year will not be enough. It will be for him and his colleagues in the government to secure their acceptance by the people who have been patient and long suffering these many years.
